

Brand and communications for what comes next.

What we communicate is what we create

I help shape how purpose is expressed in the world – taking what exists within a brand, a team, an organisation, and giving it back in language and form that their mission can be realised in.

Working closely with founders and leaders, I bring strategic thinking, people leadership and a strong commercial lens to navigate complex ideas, until what emerges is clear and shared.

I work with purpose-led organisations, not-for-profits and government across the full spectrum of brand and communications – from organisational strategy, brand and market positioning through to visual identity, websites, content and campaigns.

This document shares a little about who I am, how I work, and some examples of recent engagements.

A little about me

I'm endlessly curious about how people think – mental models, human development, philosophy, what makes us tick. Connecting our brands and our organisations to what it means to be human, what we value and what matters most lives at the heart of my practice.

I've spent the better part of the last two decades working through the cultural and technological shifts that have shaped how brands show up in the world. Each chapter, from the rise of eCommerce to AI, has raised new questions about who we are and what matters most.

Businesses have a huge role to play in the world we're creating, and how we choose to communicate shapes the reality around us. This is why I choose to work with the people and organisations building towards something better.

I live in Naarm/Melbourne with my husband Nick, our boys Kai and Lucas, and our pups Wilbur and Chloe. When I'm not working you'll find me enjoying Melbourne's food scene and tinkering with home DIY projects.

Working together

I work with a small number of organisations at any one time, spanning organisational strategy, brand and visual identity, communications and websites. My engagements take a number of forms, but are always focused on forming deep and ongoing relationships with the people I work with.

Fractional role

Brand and communications leadership embedded within your organisation, typically one-to-two days a week. I work closely alongside your leadership and as part of your team to drive your mission forward.

Strategic advisory

A regular thinking partnership for founders and leaders. We meet on an ongoing basis, working through your current priorities – from organisational strategy and brand positioning to the communications questions in front of you.

Projects

Engagements focused on a particular deliverable – typically positioning, brand identity, a website development, or a specific communications priority. These run from a few weeks to a few months, delivered end-to-end with the same strategic care as ongoing engagements.

Regen Melbourne

Regen Melbourne exists to catalyse the regeneration of Greater Melbourne, from a swimmable Birrarung to resilient local food networks to reimagined urban governance. The organisation had built a deeply integrated model with complex information hierarchies serving a wide variety of stakeholders, from community partners to funders to government.

The challenge was representing that in its fullness without becoming overwhelming – letting people into the work through multiple interconnected entry points.

I led a full website redevelopment with a focus on information architecture and brand positioning, finding a structure that could carry the complexity of Earthshots, the Systems Lab, and a growing library of projects and stories without flattening what makes the ecosystem distinctive. I refined the visual identity to feel more grounded, giving the brand a presence that matched the maturity of the work and the organisation’s evolution.

The new site has given Regen Melbourne coherence — a front door that captures who they are and what they do at the right level of depth for the funders and partners they need to bring along.

“Working with Ashleigh has been a standout experience. Our project was deeply iterative, the details evolved as we learned how to represent hierarchies of information in an interconnected way, and Ashleigh moved with us every step of the way, reshaping and refining without missing a beat.”

RECENT WORK

Capyble

Capyble helps Australian workplaces meet their Respect@Work obligations – benchmarking compliance, surfacing gaps, and building real capability around family, domestic and sexual violence prevention.

The team had built a product grounded in expert knowledge and lived experience, but the brand positioning hadn't found its footing. The obligations Capyble exists to address aren't broadly understood by most business leaders, so communications have to do double duty: point people to the need, and explain it in language that lands. Add to that a hybrid offering across consulting, SaaS and training, and landing coherent messaging across those audiences was the core challenge.

I worked with the team on market positioning and go-to-market strategy, helping to build coherence into their suite of offerings. Within this engagement, I identified the need to split their offering into two distinct products (CapyBenchmark and CapyBuild) to give structure to the hybrid model. From there, I developed messaging for each — articulating who they're for, and building a tiered language model across brand, education and conversion voices to help move audiences from understanding to action.

"Ash delivered an exceptional marketing positioning document for Capyble that truly set us apart. What impressed us was how quickly and deeply she grasped our unique business-meets-impact model — it's not a straightforward story to tell, and she nailed it."

Small Giants Academy

Small Giants Academy is a global centre for conscious leadership — running programs, impact safaris, events and a podcast that bring together change-makers working towards what they call the Next Economy.

When I came on board, the marketing function had been managed across multiple hands, and the brand’s digital presence, content and systems weren’t reflecting the sophistication of the programs themselves. There was a gap between the rigour of the work and how the organisation was showing up externally.

Working as part of the leadership team, I’ve built the marketing infrastructure to match the ambition, across brand, website, content, campaigns and systems — iterative work embedded in the rhythms of the organisation. My focus is a consistent thread of organisational strategy meeting brand thinking across everything that goes out, so the external story keeps pace with the internal impact.

RECENT WORK

WWF Australia

In the lead-up to the 2025 federal election, WWF-Australia needed a communications plan that could cut through a crowded political landscape and keep environmental issues in the conversation – while staying true to the organisation’s voice and values.

Working through audience prioritisation, message architecture, channel strategy and sequencing, we developed a national campaign plan grounded in WWF’s strengths: scientific credibility, community trust, and decades of impact. The plan needed to be sharp enough to drive action but flexible enough to move with a shifting political environment – able to adapt to the uncertainty of election timing and shifting public sentiment.

The campaign landed a message that cut to the heart of WWF’s mission, ensuring nature had a voice in the national conversation.
